ROAD EXTENSION APPROVED HERE LAID OVER IN S. F.

Supervisors O. K. Finance Plans For Boulevard

LONG DEBATE HELD

Would Be Part of De Las Pulgas Road

The proposed plan for extending Junipero Serra boulevard in the county by a bi-county road district was given the official sanction of the county board of supervisors of this county at their regular meeting Monday. The road is planned as an additional way of access from San Francisco to the road system of this county. It will connect with the highway near Burlingame and will also connect with the proposed Alameda de las Pulgas which when completed will form a highway the full length of the county and will form another highway from San Francisco into Santa Clara county.

By the proposed plan for financing the roadway extension this county will pay 15% of the cost of the work. The remaining 85% will be financed by San Francisco.

The proposed extension of the boulevard formed the topic for an extended debate before the board of supervisors of San Francisco on the same day upon which the matter was given the consideration of the board here

In the city no final decision was reached at by the board and the matter was laid over for a week. The plans for the improvement were made by a joint highway district. Supervisor Thomas L. Hickey of this county is a director of the district and represents this county on the board. It was Supervisor Hickey who presented the petition to the board Monday. It will be necessary for the boards of supervisors of both counties to pass a resolution sanctioning the work before the extension of this county can be continued.

Peninsula Traffic Point Moving Southard

The San Francisco peninsula's point of traffic concentration has moved southward due to the facilities provided by and the more general use of two additional high way arteries for the metropolis—the new Bay Shore highway unit to Burlingame and the Skyline boulevard. This is the conclusion drawn by the Highways Bureau of the California State Automobile Association from a recent traffic count conducted by the state which showed the heaviest concentration of traffic on the Peninsula highway at San Mateo, with Colma, the former "Bottleneck" point, running second. The count, made July 15 and 16, showed the average week-day traffic through San Mateo is now slightly more than 20,000 vehicles a day, while on Sundays and holidays it runs to nearly 30,000 a day

Weddings Decline As a Result of Three-Day Law

(By Capitol News Bureau-

SACRAMENTO, Aug. 9—The goddess of marriage is balking at wearing self-imposed hobble skirts

Shes falling down on the job, as a result of the three-day hesitation, or look before you leap marriage license law, in force for more than a year in California, according to L. E. Ross, the official state cupid, who appears on the payroll as state statistician.

June brides failed to feel the urge to submit to double harness as a result of the gin marriage law in June, Ross divulged today, in reporting that San Mateo along with 52 other counties in California, failed to passe June marriage records set in 1927, this year.

San Mateo county declined in the state-wide march to the altar during the month of brides, there being but 94 this year as compared with 107 last year, according to Ross' calculations.

Ross reports a decline of 2345 June weddings this year, as compared with the same month last year. Los Angeles, with Tijuana furnishing a convenient gretna green, suffered the heaviest loss of any county in the state, 1136, while counties of the San Joaquin and Sacramento valleys lost in wedding fees to Reno.

Miss Margaret Heiner and Miss Dorothy Chicott are spending a vacation at Rio Nido on the Russian river.

Big Aerial Circus To Be Held Here September 25-30

Plans for the aerial circus to be held here from September 25 to 30 are being arranged by the Pacific Aero Club, which is sponsoring the affair. The first steps in arranging the circus were taken this week when the organization opened an office in the Lambert & Walter building at 306 Webster street.

The office is being maintained here under the direction of W. F. Hamilton, who has charge of the publicity and arrangements for the event which will be a historic one for Redwood City.

It is planned to have not only a unique collection of the latest in aviation developments and a complete exposition of the industry in its present form but to have here for the occasion many of the pioneer planes, and some of the early aviators, many of whom used the local field when it was being run by the late Harry Christoferson.

A general committee is in charge of the arrangements for the program. Many members of the committee are business men of this city; others are prominent in other cities of the peninsula. The general committee as announced this week is composed of the following persons: Robert G. Fowler, general chairman; D. M. Snodgrass, treasurer; Willard Brown, aerial director; Florence S. New School Grounds Being Improved By Lawns and Walks

Workmen have been busy this week improving the grounds of the new McKinley school. The front yard of the school has been filled in and George Hopkins, the city gardener, is preparing to plant a lawn as soon as the ground can be prepared for the seed.

Workmen are busy laying sidewalks around the property and also leading into the school from the corners of the block. A driveway is also being constructed from the two corners of the block to the front entrance of the school.

During the vacation the playground has been oiled and graveled and is now in excellent shape for the children who will return to the school on the 20th.

All around the school block electroliers are being erected. These were removed from upper Broadway when they were replaced by larger ones and were given by the merchants who had them replaced to the school district for use around the new school.

SPECIAL SESSION OF LEGISLATURE IS SOUGHT

(By Capitol News Bureau)

SACRAMENTO, August 9—Two new demands for a special session of the state legislature, one by the proponent of a new panacea for the ills of the raisin industry and the other by war veterans, probaly will be laid before Governor Young during the coming week.

Mayor Frank E. Wells of Fowler is fostering a move to have the legislature consider legislation as an aid to the raisen men when it convenes to meet the state's taxation crisis. According to word received at the capitol from Assemblyman Charles A. Foster, the Fowler mayor, proposes that all raisin growers join the Sun Maid Association, that the withdrawal clause be eliminated from the contracts; that the state license all packers under a law to be enacted at the special session, a license fee of 1-2 cent on each pound of raisins to be paid, but the proviso that this fee be waived under the Clapper-Volstead Act if the packer purchases of farmers' cooperative organizations; Sun-Maid to sell to packers at price fixed according to crop; entire crop to be harvested, with 50 per cent converted into by-products for which grower receives but 1 cent per pound; second half—selected stock—to be converted into raisins.

The war veterans proposal is that the special session initiate a new $20,000,000 bond issue for the Novémber ballot to avoid a break in carrying out the veterans' farm and home purchase program.

The store here will be managed by A. J. Bechet, who, with the district superintendent, C. A. Ris, has been busy this week making plans for the opening.

The Redwood City Woolworth store, which will be under the Oakland district, will be one of the finest on the coast, according to its manager. Many new details which will form part of the Woolworth store of the future will be installed for the first time in the local store. When ready for business the store here will employ six or eight girls, the manager stated yesterday, while probably 30 girls will be employed during the opening sale.

Four hundred and seventy-three calls have been made at nurseries, 1412 growers visited, and information given at the office by telephone or by letter to 1210 inquirers.

COMMUNICATION

August 7, 1928.

Times-Gazette,
Redwood City, Calif.

Gentlemen:

I am calling your attention to certain erroneous statments being published in Redwood City regarding political endorsements by the Affiliated Clubs.

We, as an organization, have what is known as the Affiliated Club Committee, consisting of four members from each Improvement Club represented, acting as a committee only. This committee was organized primarily to facilitate representation of these clubs before the city council in matters of interest to all, and not for any political purposes whatsoever. The Redwood City Promotion Association's Constitution forbids politics within the association

Although the majority of the members of the Improvement Clubs worked and supported the new ticket at the last municipal election, it was a separate organization, namely "The Good Government League." Our individual members of course, can maintain political affiliations as they choose, but we desire it understood that as an organization we endorse or support no one.

This organization has and will continue to represent a public forum, where every citizen regardless of religions or poltical opinions can come for the purpose of discussing and taking action on important problems and projects for improvement of our community. I believe that every good citizen should his most sovereign constitution privilege of the ballot and interest himself to some extent in the study of political economy, whereby he or she can cast a vote with authoritative consideration of the principles underlyng the candidate or the condition being balloted upon However, I do not think that politics should directly enter the affairs of an organization such as ours. We desire our members to attend meetings without the feeling that political questions will be discussed, conflicting with their opinions. This would naturally lead to internal strife detrimental to the carrying out of the principles oraanized for namely, "Promoting the best interests of our community for the benefit of all."

Hoping you will give prominent publication of the facts outlined above regarding the Redwood City Promotion Association's status in the coming supervisorial controversy, I remain,

Yours very truly,

E. R. McNEE,

Secretary Redwood City Promotion Association.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC TO PLACE MOTORS IN SERVICE HERE

Promise Follows Conference With Peninsula Leaders

BETTER SERVICE

Fine Fast Coaches To Be Used By 1929

Fast motor coaches will be in service on the peninsula line of the Southern Pacific early in 1929. This was the promise made Wednesday afternoon by Paul Shoup, president of the Soutern Pacific Co. to a group of peninsula business men who met him in conference in San Francisco. The motor cars will be used to give fast service along the peninsula in the intervals between peak hours in the morning and evening. Shoup stated that the new gas electric cars had been ordered. He said:

CALIFORNIA NEWS BRIEFS

Escape of 67 inmates of State institutions during the last month was reported a few days ago—41 from mental hospitals, 18 from homes for feeble minded and 8 from reform schools.

January 1 to June 30 of this year 1146 arrests were made for fish and game law violators and $39,319 in fines was collected, Fred G. Stevenot reported a few days ago. Last year there were only 628 arrests, and fines for the period were $20,953.

The white man leads all other Criminals by a wide margin, according to State records announced recently. Out of 40,938 arrests for law violations of all classes during the last fiscal year, 33,343 involved Caucasians. Arrests of Indians and Mexicans totaled 4,451; Ethiopians, 2,107; Malays, 500, and Mongolians, 537.

The various district offices of the division of labor in California received and investigated 2899 complaints of alleged violations of labor laws during June, 1928, states Will J. French, director of the department. Of these complaints, 2624, or 90.5 per cent, were wage claims, and 275 or 9.5 per cent were complaints of violations of the eight-hour law for women and other labor statues. The department collected wages from delinquent employers, and began 138 criminal prosecutions for violations of the labor laws.

Gallows justice, the old Mosaic dictum of "a life for a life," will be banished in California at the 1929 session of the Legislature. That positive forecast of the end of capital punishment was made at Sacramento a few days ago by Senator Tom West of Alameda, following a conference with State leaders. The sentiment against the death penalty in California is unmistakable, asserted the State solon, and I am convinced that members of the Legislature dare not disregard it any longer.

As the traditional month of brides June in California was a "flop." The first June under the gin marriage law saw a decrease in weddings of more than 30 per cent from the previous bridal month, when marriage licenses could be obtained immediately upon application. Figures announced by the State department of public health reveal that only 4,663 couples exchanged vows in California last month. This number compares with 7,008 in June, 1927, a decrease of 2,345.

California's gasoline tax levy for the three months ending June 30 totals $8,477,283.14, a new State record, it was announced a few days ago by the State board of equalization. This is an increase of $3,124,698.10 over the corresponding quarter of 1927 and a gain of more than $1,000,000 over the first three months of the present year. The tax is based on distribution of 287,430,743.7 gallons of gasoline, as compared with 270,333,079.2 for the same three months in 1927, an increase of 5.58 per cent.

State Controller Ray L. Riley's drive to compel payment of taxes owed the State by motor transportation companies has been practically 100 per cent successful, he announced a few days ago. Threatened with State seizure of their cars, companies owning approximately 1,000 motor vehicles have nearly all taken steps to pay their taxes, Riley said. Estimating that not more than fifty machines will have to be sold for taxes, the Controller said that by August 13 his department will have collected $750,000, representing the first installment of a $1,000,000 tax levy and including all unsecured taxes.

California counties will receive $2,242,837.71 for highway purposes in allocation of State motor vehicle fees for the first six months of 1928. At the same time Frank G. Snook, chief of the State division of motor vehicles, announced apportionment of $2,980,937.68 to the State Highway Commission. Both State and county allotments go for repair and maintenance of roads In the county apportionment made on the basis of vehicle registrations after deduction of State traffic officers' salaries, Los Angeles county was allowed $1,193,213.66, topping all others. San Francisco receives $231,795.60 and Alameda county was third in the State with $196,537.51.

Co-operation of State and county governments toward the maintaining of a fund for support and training of the adult blind in their own homes instead of industrial schools, has been suggested by State officials. Earl E. Jensen, director of the department of institutions, reported to Governor C. C. Young that many of the 122 inmates in the industrial school for the adult blind at Oakland are so advanced in years that they find it difficult to make a living after they have been taught a trade. A. R. Heron, director of the department of finance, has suggested that a fund be created for the support of the blind in their own homes instead of at State institutions.

A plea for adoption of the percentage system in fixing the amount of contributions public school teachers shall make to the teachers' retirement fund is made in a letter to A. R. Heron, chairman of the State Department of Finance, from the High School Teachers' Association of Los Angeles. The letter was signed by Albert M. Shaw, chairman of the legislative committee of the association. The Los Angeles association also favors basing the amount of pension on the salary received during the five years previous to retirement.

California is shortly to be called upon to contribute its quota of $150,000 toward erection of a $5,000,000 American shrine to William Shakespeare. Dr. Willet E. Dentinger, founder and director general of the International Shakespeare Association, is in San Francisco to confer with Mrs. Joan H. Woodbury, fifth vice president. Mrs. Woodbury is chairman of the California committee. The object of the fund is to provide not only a shrine, but a national Shakespearian theatre, a traveling company of stars in the classical drama and a free school for deserving young actors.

State Free Employment Bureaus have found jobs for 330,948 men and women during the last two fiscal years, ending June 30. During June of this year the State bureaus placed 13,015; during May, 12,986.

California recreational roads, including the routes to Yosemite and Sequoia National Parks, have been put in final shape for vacation travel, according to the Division of Highways. Fuel oil for dust control purposes has been applied to 290 miles of highway on thirteen routes in the mountains and other vacation areas.

Determined to punish violators of the California fire laws, the State division of forestry has instituted 97 proceedings in the present season of timber-fire menace, obtained 78 convictions and sent 16 persons to jail, it was revealed recently by State Forester M. B. Pratt. Fines netting $1,422.50 have been imposed throughout the State, and the payments of damages and fire-suppression costs total $2,060.72 additional, Pratt reported.

The State of California today offers a lesson in real estate values. In 1888, the State purchased 96.12 acres of land in what is now the City of Los Angeles. It cost $6,000. Later, this site became Exposition Park. Recently the Los Angeles Real Estate Board conducted an expert appraisal of the site. This neutral agency found that the value of the property without improvements is $4,091,971. The park is in the center of a choice residential district, bounded on two sides by main boulevards.

Thirty-one persons found dead in California last year were saved from burial in potter's field as "unknown" by the activities of the State bureau of criminal identification. Clarence S. Merrill, superintendent of the bureau, has just reported his department was able last year to identify 31 of the dead from fingerprints and other descriptions furnished by officers.

By 1930 at least 75 per cent of the faculty of each of California's seven Teachers' Colleges must hold masters' degrees or higher, according to new faculty standards announced by William John Cooper, State Superintendent of Public Instruction. The Teachers' College course leading to an elementary school credential, Cooper said, has been lengthened from three to four years, affecting the class entering this fall.

More than 100 Moose lodges in California representing a membership of more than 18,000 are arranging contests to select the most attractive young woman for the grand prize of $250 at the Moose conclave in Watsonville, September 1 to 3. The award will go to the winner of the beauty pageant that is to be a feature of the conclave on the closing day. According to Walter F. Gibson, Oakland, director general, there will be 100 girls competing.

Clergymen and stenographers are industrial workers under California law, and their employers must carry compensation insurance to protect them in case of accident. Will J. French, State Director of Industrial Relations, made this statement last week in emphasizing the fact "that it is obligatory for all employers either to insure with a carrier authorized to do business in this State or to secure a certificate of consent to self-insure from the Industrial Accident Commission."

California's earthquake faults will be inspected and studied exhaustively during the annual convention of directors of the Jesuit Seismological Association, to be held at the University of Santa Clara, August 5 to 12. Two score of the most noted authorities on seismological movements on the Pacific Coast will be in attendance at the convention, according to the Rev. Cornelius J. McCoy, S. J., president of the university.

One hundred and eighty-one California motorists figuratively have been given their "walking papers" during the past six months through the State government's war upon drunken drivers. And besides being deprived of the use of their vehicles for the next year the division of motor vehicles announces these drivers also have been compelled to pay fines ranging from $50 to $1,000. It is the purpose of the State to continue the warfare on drunken drivers with unabated energy, declared Frank G. Snook, chief of the division.

Appropriation of $126,333 among eighty-eight California high schools as the government's contribution toward the cost of their agricultural instruction last year, has been announced by Julian A. McPhee, State director of vocational agriculture. Funds alloted represented an increase of $3,000 over those distributed in 1927. The government contributes toward the agricultural education cost in those schools where the Smith Hughes instruction is given along a State plan approved by federal officials. McPhee also announced an increase of 600 in the enrollment in the agricultural classes of the schools reimbursed, as compared with the attendance last year, although the attendance last year, although the 1926-1927 enrollment included only eighty-one institutions.

Deportation parties from the State insane hospital and paroles from the feeble-minded homes, together with paroles and discharges from the two prisons, resulted in a net decrease of eighty-one in the population of the several State institutions during the quarter ended June 30, Earl E. Jensen, director of State institutions, has reported. The population of the hospitals at the end of the quarter was 13,797; that of the industrial home for the adult blind and the three correctional schools, 1218; that of the feeble-minded homes, 2364, and that of the prisons, 6085.

J. D. Grant, president of the Columbia Steel Corporation, last week announced plans for further development of plants at Pittsburg and Torrence in California and at Ironton and Columbia in Utah. Grant said the corporation expected to branch out into several new lines in the steel industry, one of them through construction of a plant for manufacture of tin plate with an annual capacity of 50,000 tons. Since the first of the year the corporation has installed machinery for the manufacture of poultry wire netting, and a new open-hearth furnace has been added to the Pittsburg plant.

Chicago Will Have Biggest and Best Armory

Plans for the One Hundred Twenty-fourth Field Artillery Memorial armory in Chicago were announced in detail by Maj. Gen. Roy D. Keehn, Illinois National Guard commander. The announcement indicates that the building will be the biggest and the finest of its kind in America. It will seat more than 10,000 spectators. Here is a sketch of the building as designed.

Alexander P. Proctor, noted sculptor of New York and Los Angeles, as he appeared with the finished plaster model of his newest equestrien statue of Sheriff Till Taylor. Mr. Proctor did this in his Brussels studio and had it cast in bronze there. He expects to return to the United States soon and bring the huge statue with him for unveiling at Pendleton, Ore. The city of Pendleton ordered the work to honor the memory of the sheriff whom desperadoes killed some years ago.

FEARS DEPORTATION

If the United States deports Ludmila Maksimova, young Russian girl residing in San Francisco, she will go, not to Siberia, but to death. This was the plea voiced by her before immigration officials when she was arrested for being in the country illegally. Miss Maksimova escaped from Siberia in 1924 and came here on a one-year permit after she had been sentenced to death by Soviet authorities. Now she fears deportation as the death warrant is still waiting.

POULTRY FACTS

FEED AND CARE ARE NECESSARY

To get good summer egg production it is necessary to feed and care for hens even more carefully than in the winter time, in the opinion of Charles N. Keen of the Colorado Agricultural college. Poultrymen are mistaken if they think that just because they have good range for their laying flock they can do away with the mash and scratch feed.

"Experiments have shown that best results are obtained when the consumption of laying mash is increased and scratch feed decreased during the summer months," says Keen. "It is a good practice when the hens begin to let up in production to moisten enough of the fine mash from the feed helpers to last the hens about twenty minutes. Feed this at noon each day. This practice will increase the consumption of protein-carrying mash so essential for egg production. During the winter months more scratch feed is necessary to keep up body weight and provide warmth. In summer, heat is not essential and if hens get too much fattening feed they simply cease laying and put on weight."

By this method the total feed consumption will be less while the birds are on range than when they are confined to their laying houses. Production should, however, remain about the same and will be more economical.

Other factors that will help get economical production during the summer months and also hold up the profits are proper sanitation, careful culling and management. Naturally the death loss will be higher during the hot weather and all sickly birds should be removed from the flock as soon as noticed. Sanitation is also much more of a problem during hot weather, but it is necessary for profits.

"Trying to force an early molt is a mistake," according to Keen. It has not been found practical. Get all the eggs you can while you can, he advises, and if you have good birds which continue to lay through the molt, they should be forced to rest before the hatching season opens the following spring.

Clean Out Mites and Bedbugs in Henhouse

Chicken mites and bedbugs in poultry houses can be cleaned out by a thorough application of carbolineum painted on the roosts, dropping boards and in the nests. Gas drippings, obtained from around city gas plants, has also proven valuable in getting rid of mites, according to Iowa State college.

Mites do their work at night, sucking the blood from the poultry. During the day they hide away in small cracks and crevices of the house. In getting rid of mites it is important that all equipment be movable so that it can be cleaned and treated for mites.

In using either carbolineum or gas drippings it is important that the chickens be kept out of the house for 24 hours, as the fumes are likely to injure the chickens' eyes and may taint the eggs.

Poultry Facts

After the flock has been culled is an excellent time to dip for lice.

* * *

Pullets, for heavy winter production, must be well developed, vigorous, and carry a surplus of body fat.

* * *

Late molting hens are the laying hens and they should be saved from the market to be used for breeders.

* * *

A little ground bone is a good stimulant to pullets that are lazy about laying—also to older hens. But it must be fresh or it may cause ptomaine poisoning.

* * *

A sudden change from the regular ration to new grains often causes indigestion and diarrhea. These troubles are frequently confused with other diseases, such as cholera or limberneck.

* * *

Soft-shelled eggs usually are a result of a lack of mineral in the ration. If you place oyster shells or other shell-making materials before your birds, you probably will not be troubled with soft-shelled eggs.

* * *

If a cool basement is not available on the farm for storing eggs in summer, a small room may be excavated under the henhouse or dwelling house, or a small structure built after the fashion of a root cellar, with insulated walls and ceiling.

* * *

Teach the chicks to roost, as soon as they are old enough to learn. Provide low perches as soon as they are three weeks old, and the chicks won't crowd each other to death in the corners of the brooder house.

* * *

A good paint for mites can be made of old engine oil to which is added a small amount of commercial coal tar disinfectant. Paint the roosts on both the upper and under side and soak the oil mixture into the cracks so they will be sealed and leave no space where mites can hide.

* * *

A hen usually lays eggs like the one she was hatched from.

* * *

Cull the flock first, so that the hens which are to be sold may go to market, and dip the remainder in a solution of one ounce of sodium fluoride to a gallon of water.

* * *

Wood ashes are valuable for chickens in two ways. They eat the small bits of charcoal, which are good for them. And chickens that dust in the ashes will be troubled much less by lice.

An Uncommon Car

A man was proudly exhibiting to a friend his newly-acquired car, which was of a very well-known and popular make.

"Ah," said his friend, "so you've got one of these. I should have thought you would have gone in for something—well—a little more uncommon."

"It is uncommon," retorted the owner, indignantly. "In fact, in a sense, it's unique. It's paid for!"

Convict Used Brains in Effecting Escape

Hilary K. Adair, the noted detective, said to a San Francisco reporter:

"Some people claim that criminals aren't clever. Well, what do you think of this for a clever dodge?

"A chap who was doing ten years for arson escaped one afternoon, but he still had his convict clothes on, and he couldn't loaf around and wait for night because they'd surely catch him if he did.

"Yes, it was necessary for this arson chap to make tracks through the busy prison town, and how do you think he managed it? Well, sir, he took off his striped convict suit in an alley, then he rolled his underdrawers up above the knee and his undershirt sleeves up to the shoulder, and then he tore lickety-split through the crowded Main street of that little town and out into the safe country where his friends were waiting.

"Nobody paid any attention to him, of course. They thought he was one of these runners training for a marathon or something."

His Final Mistake

"You've been a most faithful husband, John. I believe that not once since you married me have you done a wrong thing."

"No, my dear, that was the last."—Montreal Star.

Nation To Greet Hoover

ALL roads in this section will lead to Stanford tomorrow. They will lead to the stadium where Herbert Hoover, the next president of the United States, will announce his policies and set forth the issues of the campaign. His views will be tersely told and in plain and pithy language that will not be misunderstood. It is believed that over a hundred thousand people will be at the stadium while fully thirty million persons will hear him over the radio.

Citizens 3000 miles away will listen to his words of wisdom. While partaking of their evening meal they will hear the speech just as if they were present at Stanford. This is in striking contrast to the early days of the republic, when the speech of acceptance of the nominee would not reach the voter for months after its delivery. What a change? What development and what might we expect in the future? This is the first time in the history of California that a western man has been notified of his nomination. It will be an epochal event, one that every Californian may well feel proud of and may well have a thrill of pride over the republican nominee, who typifies the highest of qualifications of an American citizen to the great office to which he aspires.

We Must Elect Free

WHILE it is true Congressman Arthur M. Free has only negligible opposition for re-election, republican voters should not be unmindful of the fact that the enemy is working and that every republican should go to the polls on August 28 and cast his or her ballot for the republican nominee for congress. Apathy in this regard might mean defeat.

Congressman Free has been faithful and loyal to his district and constant and consistent in his support of the administration. Owing to his long experience in congress he is useful to the district and can do more than any new member, it behooves every republican to vote for Free. He will shortly leave on a stumping campaign throughout the east for Herbert Hoover to the neglect of his own campaign in California. He will have to rely on his friends to take care of the district in his absence San Mateo county has always been the banner county for Free. Let there be no diminution in the support this year. Make the majority larger than ever.

Boys and Guns

ANGELO PATRRI has the following to say about guns and boys and we heartily agree with him, selecting only a sentence here and there:

"I believe that toy pistols are dangerous toys in that they lead children to think that that their use is logical and proper idea." "No man or woman may carry a gun without a permit, and to get one, he or she must show good cause. But children are armed with guns and play murder and hold-up games with them." "It seems to me that there are so many toys that children could use to advantage, and without harm to themselves or others that the symbols of war might be omitted."

"Whether you are big navy or little navy, whether you are pacifist or militant, does not matter in the least. You are grown up and are responsible for what you do and are. But childhood is helpless."

Personally, I hate guns. I would not allow a child under twenty to handle one. If and when it became necessary for him to handle one, I would have him trained to do so by an expert. I wouldn't coax a child to love them." A broom, a rake, a shovel, a spade, a hatchet and a hammer and nails, a wheel and a dog and a kite, a sand lot and a bat and a ball, a horse and a boat and a good pair of hiking shoes, a swim and a race, a sleep under the open sky seem better means of training to fine citizenship than the toy pistol, a rifle, or a sword."—Our Dumb Animals.

STATE HEALTH RATE LEADS U. S. A.

San Mateo County Stands High Record Of California

By LAWRENCE MONFORT
(Staff Correspondent)

SACRAMENTO, Ang. 9.—Hale and hearty and growing more healthy every year—that's California. And Redwood City used as a cross-section of the state's health chart may well be the envyiof neighbors as well as less fortunate communities outside the sunkist state.

For San Mateo county rates as a leader in the health of its citizens for the first half of 1918 when but 65,969 cases of communicable disease were reported by health authorities, it was announced today by Dr. Waalter M. Dickie, director of the state department of heath.

Californians must doff their hats to old Doctor Sun, admit the efficacy of his pure air treatment and praise his hospital located in the wide, open reaches for which their state is famous, declared the state's medical director in announcing that the remarkably low morbidity rate for the six months ending June 30 showed only the following cases of illness reported from San Mateo county.

Chicken pox, 25; diphtheria, 73 measles 11; mumps 4; pneumonia 13; scaret fever, 57; typhoid, 1; whooping cough, 13; meningitis, 2; tuberculosis, 88; german measles, 6; encephalitis, 7.

Standing in the foreground of the Union's leaders California registers, according to Dr. Dickie's report as having had but one case of communicable illness for each of its 76 citizens during the first half of the year.

And of these, more than two-thirds are recorded as the diseases of childhood, with the great proportion accredited to the less serious maladies. These ailments belonging to infancy and adolescence numbered 44,242 in all divided between chicken pox, 14,643, by far the most formidable numerically; measues, 3514; scarlet fever, 4551; whooping cough now subsiding after raising its collective voice rather vigorously in late spring months 5589; german measles, 8672; mumps, 7273

Diphtheria, which attacks old and young alike, attacked 2826 in semi-annual period, with an exceptionally low mortality rate. Influenza, wich has its periodic resurgences, injected transient aches to the bones of but 1056 persons, while pneumonia, in 90 out of 100 cases the result of carelessness, sent 4551 to bed.

Smallpox, which the state has had on the run definitely for several years, developed but 693 cases. There were 129 cases of meningitis and but 170 cases of poliomilitis or infantile paralysis. Disentary cases were reported as but 66 for the period. The campaign for pure drinking water is bearing fruit, it appears, since but 262 cases of typhoid and 11 cases of para-typoid were distributed over the six months or few more than 40 per month for the state's 5,000,000 persons.

Tuberculosis, center of science' onslaught for two decades is giving-way, but slowly. The state total for the semi-annual period is 5646, and many of these cases represent outlanders here for the medecinal virtues of the California climate.

Social diseases, comparatively dormant in the winter and on an ascending scale tis spring, total 6336.

The swath of more obscure diseases has been narrow. Erysipelas with 424 cases, heads the list. Nine lepers have been discovered, in the half-year and there were 10 cases of ophthalmia, 32 of pellagra, 27 of tetanus, 8 of hookworm, 2 of malta fever, 2 of human rabies, 7 of Rocky Mountain fever, 19 of tricinosis, 4 of actinomycosis

The state recorded 397 cases of animal rabies, of which 322 occurred in Los Angeles county and 154 in the city of Los Angeles, Dr. Dickie reported.

In addition Fresno produced two cases of botulism, and Imperial one case of tularemia, while San Diego uncovered a single instance of typhus, Santa Clara contributed a case of yaws, an instance of plague was found in Watsonville, one instance of botulism was checked in Shasta county and Tulare contributed a single case of anthrax.

STATE TRADE MARK IS NOT FAVORED

Proposal Opposed In Legislature

By CLEM WHITAKER
Staff Correspondent

SACRAMENTO, August 7—Turning thumbs down on the state trademark proposal, the Agricultural Legislative Committee of California, in a resolution adopted at its annual meeting, today condemned the plan on the following counts:

1. That it would set up another state department in conflict with the State Department of Agriculture," thus creating endless confusion and turmoil."

2. That it would inject the state into the advertising business with the possibility that the advertising fund would be used for political purposes.

3. That the state's advertising fund to spread the fame of a state label could not be expended " in full coordination with the sales promotion plans of the private agencies which must dispose of the agricultural commodities.

4. That extensive advertising of a state trade-mark probably would result in boycotting of California products in other states and foreign countries in order to preserve their home markets for their own producers.

Amplifying its fourth objection, in which the committee fears that the proposal would invite a boycott of California products by rival states and countries, the committee declared that "the more active the advertising campaign on a locality basis, the more quickly would the home producers develop such campaigns."

The state committee endorsed, however, the "fundamental soundness of the principle of standardization, grading and honest labeling of agricultural commodities. It added, though, that "there are features of the trade-mark proposal which are believed not to be practical or workable under existing conditions, and which , were they to become law, would prove inimical to the best interests of agriculture and of the state as a whole."

Declaring its opposition to the creation of a state revolving fund to advertise the state trade-mark throughout the world, which would be reimbursed out of the fees received for use of the trade-mark, the committee's resolution declared that "This will in effect put the state in the advertising business, a move which it is believed would prove wholly unsound because of the tendency to political control of the state body expending such moneys."

Ralph Taylor, executive secretary of the argicultural committee, had previously come out against the trade-mark proposal.

Coast Counties Lead In Flower Exhibits

California can well be pround of its profuse flower basket, in the opinion of Carl A. Melcher of McFarland, director in charge of the floricultural displays to be seen at the State Fair here September 1 to 8. Costal counties of California are most prominent with their floral exhibits.

A total of $410 in premiums are offered for the best displays of flowers. Floral exhibits are located in the booths of counties, where the flowers are grown. Gladiolas, carnations, chyrsanthemums, sweet peas, dahlias, asters and zinnias are a few of the varieites the flower lover will see when attending the Fair.

Choice Honey Shown At Sacramento Fair

While California's girls have the rest of the nation's feminine beauty backed off the map for sweetness, this state's honey is sweeter still, says Carl A. Melcher of McFarland, director in charge of the bees and honey exhibit at the State Fair here September 1 to 8.

Look at the bees and honey, Melcher says, and you won't get stung, for seeing the exhibit will result in an heavy appetite for grandma's favorite biscuits spread thick with honey.

Songs of Plain Folks

By James Lewis Hays

Husking Time

Horses hitched by lantern light,
Rattling wagon, morning star,
Corn rows dim though frosted white—
Sweet and keen these mornings are!
Hear that "tap, tip-tap" star?
Someone's sideboards play a tune,
Neighbors' wagons rumble out;
Sure, we're not a bit too soon!

Gray dawn spreading in the sky,
Everywhere the pleasant sound
Of the solid ears that fly
In the cornfields all around.
Near and far, the cheery pound—
"Thump, ta-bump-thump!"—
Makes a rhyme,
Echoes o'er the frosty ground;
It's the tune of husking time.

Red sun climbing in the east,
Bringing in a perfect day.
Day of work? Not in the least!
When a fellow's heart is gay
It's a great deal more like play.
"Thump-thump," fill the wagons up!
Merrily we husk away,
Life is wine and this the cup!

Candidate Has Knowledge of Peninsula Needs

John W. Coleberd of South San Frascisco, who is a candidate for election to the office of assemblyman from San Mateo county, is one of the peninsula's outstanding citizens and has long been prominent in every movement for betterment of the entire district.

Coleberd has practiced law in his home city since 1911 and during most of that time served in the capacity as city attorney. Professionally he is recognized as one of the most able lawyers in the bay region and is a recognized authority on municipal law, being included on the program of speakers at practically every convention ever held by the California League of Municipalities.

"I have made a long study of the problems that confront the Peninsula," said Colberd this week in discussing his candidacy for the important office of assemblyman, "and I feel fully qualified to represent the Peninsula in the legislature.

"During my law career here I have come into contact with people from all sections of San Mateo county and trough my active affiliation with the various civic organizations to which I belong, I have learned of the peninsula's development requirements.

"Should I be elected at the primary election to be held on August 28, the people of San Mateo county can feel assured that they will have a conscientious and hard working representative."

New Zone Proposed In Redwood City

A zone to be known as the light industrial zone is proposed in an ordinance introduced before the city council Monday evening. The ordinance as prepared by City Attorney Mansfield would add the new zone to the four zones now in effect, the first and second residential, the business and industrial zone. The new zone is proposed to take care of certain industries which must be close into town and yet must be classed as industrial. The present industrial zone is limited to the eastern section of the town and to a few isolated spots which were used industrially before the zoning ordinance was put into effect.

New Building Planned By Telephone Co. For Palo Alto

Following closely upon the announcement of its plans for the construction of a new telephone building in Palo Alto, the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company this week, through J. D. Worthington, local manager made public the proposed installation of dial system operation for Palo Alto telephones. Work will be started on the project shortly, and it is expected that the change to the new system from the present operation will take place in the fall of 1929.

In the telephone company's plans for its new building full provision is made for the accomodation of the extensive new equipment necessary to dial system operation. The structure will comprise two stories and basement, and will be located on the north side of Bryant street, just east of University avenue. Construction will be entirely fireproof and provision has been made to insure sufficient strength in walls and foundations for later additions.

Said Worthington this week: "The even increasing growth of Palo Alto and vicinity and the consequent increased demands for telephone service make the new building necessary. In fulfilling present needs the company is also looking into the future and providing for the installation of ample equipment.

"The building will include the most up-to-date features, all designed to assist in the overall efficiency of our service to the public. The business office will be located in the front on the first floor, together with other offices of the company. Power plant and heating equipment will be located in the basement. The remainder of the building will be occupied by the local and long distance central office equ pment.

"As in all modern telephone buildings, an attractive, well furnished rest room wil be provided for the use of the operators, so as to give them comfortable and cheerful surrounlings during leisure hours. Even though the dial system will provide telephone service, operating employees will still be required for long distance operating, information, and other services."

Menlo Natives Plan Gay Street Carnival

Plans are being made for a street carnival to be given at Menlo Park on Saturday night, September 25th, by the Menlo Parlors of Native Sons and Native Daughters. The carnival will take place on Santa Cruz avenue, between the highway and the post office corner.

Among the concessions for which arrangements are being made are a fish pond for the children; a fortune teller; a side show with the usual freaks, but a little unusual in some respects; the ever-popular "beeno" and many others. A five-piece orchestra has been secured to furnish music for a street dance.

The carnival is being given by the two parlors in order to raise funds for the celebration of Admission Day on September 9th.

Ordinary retail grocery clerks are not taught economy in the strictest sense. They use too much paper and twine—large bags where small would do—they drop bags and merchandise on the floor and sweep them out, all of which adds to the cost of doing business. Safeway men are taught to avoid every form of waste—that's why they excel in economy.

MENLO PARK

Miss Catherine Airyard, the pretty daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Airyard of Menlo Park, has gone to San Francisco to become a professional nurse. The young lady has a lovable disposition and just suited in manner and education for the profession she has chosen as her life work. Her friends in Menlo Park wish her success.

The Hoover acceptance speech will draw a large crowd to the Stanford Stadium tomorrow afternoon. All Menlo Park will be there including its distinguished citizen, Senator S. M. Shortridge, who will have a seat close to the next president of the United States. Those wishing to hear Hoover and not having tickets should get to the stadium by one o'clock. The proceedings will begin at 2 o'clock but the speech of acceptance will not be delivered until 3:30. It is thought fully 125,000 persons will be present to listen to the words of wisdom of the distinguished nominee of the republican party.

The first of a series of card parties will be given in the Masonic hall, Menlo Park on next Wednesday evening, August 15th by the Native Sons and Native Daughters. Others to be given on the following three Wednesday nights. Prizes each evening and the grand prize at the finish will be awarded.

John Bondeson, local agent for the American Railway Express Co. up until a short time ago when he was transferred to Modesto, has been appointed agent at Palo Alto. Mr. Bondeson is residing in Menlo Park and is glad to get away from te heat of the valley. He believes there is no place like the peninsula.

If the people of Menlo Oaks are wise in their day and generation they will do all they can to become a part of the city of Menlo Park. Their chance to better their locality is opportune, right now by making every effort to annex. If they don't they will have a community of shacks and when they do the people of Menlo Park will be loath to receive them.

Real esate men and subdividers formerly said to a prospect, "Let us take you down to the tract." Now it's, "Let's us take you over the tract" in an airplane. During the week Mr. Bohannan of the Investment Realty Company took an inteded purchaser over Menatlo Park and when the buyer returned to terra firma he purchased property in the aggregate of $10,000. A better view of land is secured from above and no one knows that to a greater degree than does the real estate man, who at times is up in the air when about to close a large deal.

An attempt was made on Monday evening last to rob the grocery store of M. McCarthy on the highway. The bandit was evidently freightened when he had broken the glass in the window and aroused Mrs. Larrecou, residing in the upper story of the building and fled. Mrs. Larrecou notified te sheriff's office. Deputies came to the scene of the robbery at once, where the chief of police, and Constable Grill had preceded them. No clue was left by the culprit for the officers to work on.

Menlo Park Council met in regular session Tuesday evening with a full membership.

Commissioner Walker reported that the foundation for the garage in the Hermosa tract, which was complained of at the last meeting, had been properly done. This matter brought up the question of the temporary occupancy of garages, Mayor Weeden saying that it was being prevented throughout the cities of the peninsula. People would occupy the garage for a long period of time to the detriment of the locality in which they were erected. Weeden urged that all applicants for temporary occupancy of their garage accompany their request with plans for the residence to be built. No action was taken on the request.

City Engineer Kneese, who was to consult with the state highway commission in an effort to secure permission to initiate the work of paving the street from Oak Grove avenue to Glenwood avenue, was not present. He will report next week on the subject.

On motion of Blake, seconded by Ellis, Frank T. Sherwood was appointed poundmaster of the city of Menlo Park. He is a resident of this city.

Commissioner Walker stated to the council that he was not receiving the proper co-operation from Building Inspector Smith. Walker thought that Smith should report to him before taking matters direct to the council. Nothing was done by the council in the matter.

Mr. Bratchel, a resident of Menlo Oaks, was given the floor to speak on the annexation question. He declared that the people of that district were opposed to annexation to Menlo Park. They liked the wide open spaces and had no desire to organize a local government. The improvement club of that place last winter voted against annexation. Dale reported that St. Patrick's Seminary would not oppose the annexation if all the difficulties were ironed out. The institution would not stand in the way.

The question of giving a permit to the Menlo Cleaning and Dyeing Works to erect a class C bilding on Doyle avenue was discussed at some length by the council but no action was taken. The bug-bear is whether or not the avenue is to be declared a business or residential street. Blake, in a short speech, declared the police department was growing steadily and doing splendid work and secured big revenue for the city and therefore should have better compensation. He moved that the salary of the chief be raised $50 a month and that he be furnished with a motorcycle. The raise of $50 was granted on motion, but the request for a motorcycle was laid over temporarily. Walker seconded the motion for the raise.

The dog ordinance was amended so as to raise the rates and prevent the selling of animals for vivisection purposes. The ordinance preventing the carrying of firearms in the city was also amended. Both ordinances will be passed at the next meeting of the council.

The council will meet with the planning commission this evening to hear the discussion of the tentative report of the commission. The council will meet again next Tuesday evening.

A ten-pound baby girl was born at the Palo Alto hospital on Saturday last to Mr. and Mrs. P. K. Ellis, residing in Stanford Park. The proud father is the well-known lumber man and a brother of J. C. Ellis, the councilman.

The local postoffice building is remodeled and improved. Seventy-five new boxes are being put in for the accomodation of the public. The growing business of the office and the popularity of the handsome postmaster demand these improvements.

E. J. Mc Laughlin, the shoe dealer, accompanied by his son, Edward, has departed for Red Bluff to spend his annual vacation and to look over his ranch there.

Mr. Vevurka, the able station agent, has returned from Los Angeles after an absence of over a month, and is at his desk once more.

While the property in Menlo Park is within a reasonable price, it would be well for the council and taxpayers to look around for a site for a city hall. There are several attractive sites in town that could be purchased right now at a small figure. These properties not only could be used for a city hall but for a park and a community center as well. A small bond issue could easily arrange for the purchase of a site and the cost would be very little to the individual taxpayer. Think it over.

A large number of people were present at the dedication of the Corpus Christi Monastery last Saturday morning. The sermon was preached by Archbishop E. J. Hanna. He told of the sacrifices the sisters were making and how their prayers would result in a benefit to the community and to mankind in general. Fifty members of he clergy from the bay counties were present as well as a number of sisters. Bishop Mitty of Salt Lake City took part in impressive blessing of the monastery. The day was a big event in the history of the institution and will long be remembered by the clergy and laity who were present.

The Menlo Park Planning Commission will sit with the city council this evening to listen to arguments for and against the tentative report of the commission presented to the council a month ago. All property owners should be present and air their views on the report which has zoned the city into business, residential and industrial sections.

BERKELEY WOMANS DIES AT HOME OF SISTER

Mrs. Celia Arendt of Berkeley who was isiting her sisterv, Mrs. Leonard Solomon at Emerald Lake, passed away suddenly at the Solomon home Sunday after a brief illness. The cause of the woman's death is said to have been an attack of acute indigestion, a malady from which she had suffered several attacks on previus occasions.

On Saturday evening Mrs. Arendt attended a barbecue at the Emerald Lake Golf Club at whic beans were served which are believed to have been slightly fermented as severa members of the party were taken sick following the barbeque. The beans alone, however, physicians state, were not enough to result in the woman's death. Others of the party who were affected by eating the beans were Supervisor and Mrs. John Poole, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Holt, Hrs. Walter Kellogg and John E. Layng.

Mrs. Arendt was the wife of Adolph Arendt of Berkeley and a sister of Aaron Brealuer, Mrs. I.

The Peninsula Plan

Special Series of Articles on San Mateo County Development

The "Redwood City Times Gazette" has pleasure in announcing that Guy Wilford Hayler, city planning expert and consultant to the City Planning Commissions of Burlingame, Menlo Park, etc., will contribute a series of three articles to our columns. The first article will appear next week.

In view of the great interest evoked by the meeting of the City Planning Commissions of the various Peninsula cities recently held in Menlo Park, these articles will be particularly important.

Mr. Hayler is one of the best known authorities on City Planning in America. He has been engaged in this work in Europe and Canada as well as in the United States.

He was for six years employed on the working out of the great improvement projects of the Chicago Plan—probably the most stupendous city reconstruction in the world. His work in California covers San Francisco, Berkeley, Richmond and other cities. He is the City Planning consultant at Burlingame, Menlo Park, etc., and is thoroughly familiar with local conditions. For two and a half years he was Chief Engineer of the San Francisco Bay Counties Regional Plan. It is of interest to note that he took the first tseps to propose the acquisition of Coyote Point as a State Park, and the proposition is now before the California State Park Commission.

New Plant Planned By Graham-Paige

Forced by an overwhelming country-wide demand for their 1928 products, the Graham-Paige Motors Corporation of Detroit last week announced in a communication to Carl Lindquist, Graham-Paige dealer of Menlo Park, that ground will be broken this week for a $1,000,000 automobile body plant. The new unit will operate in conjunction with that of Motor Bodies, Graham-Paige body building subsidiary established earlier in the year, Mr. Lindquist stated yesterday.

"The new plant, which it is expected will employ 1,200 men and carry a monthly pay roll of about $125,000, will be in operation by November," said the local Graham-Paige representative. "The new pliant will cover thirteen acres of land and will consist of ten sections, each 90 feet wide and 240 feet long, providing 216,000 square feet of operating space.

"The plant will be devoted to the building of diversified passenger car body styles, which will include coupes, roadsters, sedans, cabriolets and special-bodies. Production plans will give output of about onethird of all Graham-Paige bodies to the two Motor Bodies, Inc. industries."

REPUBLICANS LEAD DEMOCRATS HERE BY FOUR TO ONE

As compiled by County Clerk Elizabeth M. Kneese the party affiliations of the voters of the county is as follows:

Republican, 20,092; Democratic, 5,782; Prohibition, 17; Socialist, 93; total vote of the county 26,-910. With this big registration for the republican party it may be judged what chance Al Smith has in the county which has always been the banner republican county of the state. Hoover will secure a tremendous vote on the peninsula.

Declining to state party affiliation are 936.

Water Users Seek Change in Laws Regarding Rights

By CLEM WHITAKER

Staff Correspondent

SACRAMENTO, Aug 9—Launching the fight for overthrow of the riparian water rights doctrine in California, under which stream-bank land owners are now privileged to enjoin the diversion of water to lands that no not touch the streams, W. D. Wagner today announced organization of the Water Users Constitutional Amendment Committee, headed by William Dubrow of Willows, to conduct the campaign for Proposition No. 7 on the November ballot.

Adaption of the constitutional amedment, it is claimed by Wagner, secretary of the state-wide committee, will not abolish riparian rights but will preclude stream bank land owners from assuming a "dog-in-the-manger" policy with respect to water they do not need.

San Mateo county land holders are linked with other sections of the state in the committee that will lead the battle for the new water amendment, it was announced, and owners of 3,500,000 acres of irrigated lands, represented by the Irrigation Districts Association have been enlisted in the crusade. Municipal, as well as private water and electrical power interests, owners of municipal and irrigation seccrities, state officials, bankers and jurists are included among the sponsors of the amendment, according to the campaign announcement released today.

The water act, formerly known as Assembly Constitutional Amendment No. 27, constituted one of the biggest issues of the 1927 legislative session, with Assemblyman Bradford S. Crittenden of Tracy and Assemblyman Van Bernard of Butte City leading the fight at that time. Brought to the fore by the famous Harmingaus decision, it was claimed during during the session that unless the riparian act was abrogated development in the state would be brought to a standstill.

"The right of the riparian owner—and the right of every other user of water—should be limited to the water he really needs," State Engineer Edward Hyatt, one of the members of the new committee, asserted in explaining the purpose of the campaign. "This amendment merely restricts the riparian owner to the reasonable use of water flowing by his lands for beneficial purposes.

"Unless the amendment is adopted, further development of the state by means of irrigation or the generation of electric power will be greatly retarded. Every city in the state is in danger of water shortage in the future, under the present riparian law, because this old doctrine makes practically impossible the building of any more reservoirs for the stor age of water for irrigation, power development or the use of the cities.'

The executive and general committees of the campaign organization includes in their membership, F. G. Athearn, San Francisco; Colonel Ed Fletcher, San Diego; P. H. Griffin, Modesto; Alden Anderson,, Sacramento banker; George P. Clements, head of the agricultural department of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce; Ralph P. Merritt,, former head of the Raisin Growers" Association; Former Supreme Court Justice Warren Olney, Jr.; A. B. Tarpey, Fresno vienyardist; Former Governor George C. Pardee, now president of the East Bay Municipal Utility District; Arthur S. Crites, Bakersfield banker; Attorney General U. S. Webb; State Engineer M. M. O'Shaughnessy and City Attorney John J. O'-Toole of San Francisco; James Mills, Sacramento Valley orchardist and regent of the University of California; George L. Swendsen, Fresno Chamber of Commerce; Robert A. Condes, president of the State Board of Agriculture; .S C. Evans, secretary of the Boulder Dam Association, and G. A. Davidson, San Diego banker.

WHEN CHILDREN SEEM LAZY

By Chrles E. Boynton, M. D.
Atlanta, Ga.
Member Gorgas Memorial

The normal child, in my opinion, is not lazy. On the contrary the normal child is overflowing with enthusiasm and energy, is always active. Therefore, if a child apears to be lazy, he is mentally or physically sick. To correct this laziness, the parents should not scold the child but should seek to discover the cause by consulting a competent physician.

If your child is lazy, you can be sure he does not feel well. The trouble is to consult a competent duration, or it may be the beginning of a malady leading to very serious results. The safest way to find out just what is the trouble is to consolt a competent physician. Give the child the benefit of the doubt. Dou't scold him—help him.

Every healty good feeder should be more or less lazy after each meal to allow for proper digestion. This, however, should pass and pandemonium reign.

If the laziness tends to become continuous, it may be due to a chronic intestinal indifestion with its accompanying symptoms. The standing or sitting posture may be altogether incorrect with resulting fatigue, which may be interpreted as laziness. A beginning, but deep seated, tubercular infection may be at work. The blood may be thin from a simple or more serious anemia. Hockworm or other intestinal parasites may be present. Some of the glands of intestinal secretion, especially the thyroid, may not be working efficiently, and consequently the slow movements of body and mind may be incorrectly interpreted as laziness.

The eyesight may be defective, with the resulting exhaustion due to eyestrain. Correct glasses may do away with the lethargy. Adenoids or enlarged tonsils may prevent enough oxygen entering the lungs to give energy to the body. These same causes may prevent sound refreshing sleep.

Too late hours, with not enough sleep; with older children too much reading with not enough out-of-door exercise, too many moving pictures in stuffy rooms, too many late dances, too many "dates," all lead to exhaustion which is often called laziness.

During the changes which occur at puberty, that period which the individual is neither child nor adult, laziness is often a symptom. The internal changes are making great demands upon the vitality and resources of the body. Laziness at this time is to be encouraged, rather than to call forth temper on the part of the parents. It will pass off after the changes have taken place.

The natural inheritance of children should be health, happiness and energy expressed in the constant desire to be doing something. If these characteristics are not present, we grown-ups should not be in too big a hurry to hand down our judgment as "just lazy." In the majority of cases we should be wrong and perhaps find out our error too late to remedy the trouble.

Parental sympathy and intelligent study of the child will probably lead to a correct diagnosis.

Miss Annie Bullivant, deputy in the office of County Clerk Elizabeth Kneese, spent a week of her vacation visiting Mr. and Mrs. William Heaney at their summer home at Lake Tahoe.

Guests too, like automatic hot water service
One never knows when hot water is wanted in their home. And one never knows who wants it.
On the average, there is a demand for hot water 70 times a day in the usual family of four. And this demand starts in the early morning and continues until late at night.
How inconvenient it is to meet that demand with the ordinary water heater!
But a modern Automatic Gas Water Heater keeps hot water always ready for instant use. You merely turn the hot water faucet for a cupful or gallons of steaming water.
Why don't you, too, enjoy the comfort and convenience of a modern Automatic Gas Water Heater? It is the cheapest way to heat water in the home.

Where, oh where had I heard that click before? Last night, in that same room? Could it have been that mechanism of the shaft and the lever which I confused with a hammer and a trigger? I caught Charles MacIvor's eye: he was glancing at me triumphantly; he read my thought. Instinctively I glanced at Julia, and she was looking at me imploringly, as if to beg me not to misjudge her, even though that instrument must have been in her hand before she emerged from the shadows, snatched up to deceive the intruder, who she did not know was her cousin. Yet I hardly noticed either of them. That strange click was beating on my brain; its source, that small brass box, had been in Darrow's; I had heard that click before, not once, but often! I had heard it at 10:40 that fateful Monday previous, when the shipping-office applicant rang in, and again ten minutes later; at 7:20 Thursday evening, and also at 10:35—that click, which I now knew was not the time-clock, similar though it had sounded. All in one stunned minute these facts flashed across my mind. Then Mr. Almy spoke. He was working the flat screw on the top of the box up and down, and at intervals snapping the trigger. He tapped the screw:

"This is a depth-gauge. It regulates the depth which these knives cut. They can make a deep incision or a slight scratch, as desired. Sixteen of 'em, eh? And all grouped together. This is a beautiful little instrument."

Julia shivered.

"'Paris, eighteen-twenty-five,'" read Mr. Almy, slowly, deciphering some tiny letters along one edge of the box which he turned to the light. "This instrument is evidently used for scarifying, MacIvor; belongs to the days of bloodletting. Your great-grandfather's was it?"

"Yes! It's a spring-lancet."

"Now, how did it get into Darrow's, so that you should have to go back after it?" wondered Mr. Almy, paying no attention to the defiant tone. "Miss Fuller, what were you doing with this spring-lancet in your desk?"

"It never was in my desk!" I protested.

"But you say you saw Mr. MacIvor at your desk Thursday night, and he says he went to Darrow's to get this spring-lancet."

"It never was in the desk," I repeated firmly, "but it was under the desk. When I sat down there to work, early that evening, I pulled my chair far in, to settle down. It was the first time in three days I had been able to do so without fear of interruption; since Monday I had merely snatched a few minutes there as I was able, constantly rising to look up references or find material. Well, as I pulled my chair in that time, I distinctly heard this very click. My foot must have touched the hammer of the lancet: it must have been under the desk, set!"

Julia began to tremble violently. Her cousin said with triumph:

"There! You've given yourself away. I can't protect you any longer. I saw you in Darrow's Monday morning, Julia, in the history alcove. I saw grandfather in the medical alcove in front of you. I was in the narrow left-hand aisle under the gallery. I didn't want to see what might happen if you two met in that bookshop. So I helped you, again, by clearing out."

"What time were you there?" demanded Julia.

"Ten o'clock. I left within five minutes of entering the shop, and went straight to my Spanish lesson, remaining there until twelve o'clock. No doubt you know grandfather was last seen conscious at twenty minutes of eleven. And didn't I call you up early Thursday, to ask how you were?"

"Yes; and to ask questions that showed me you thought maybe I had grasped the fact that you and grandfather both wanted that book I had read him about, the week before," returned Julia, scornfully. "That was the first time you suggested maybe I had been after it in Darrow's; that maybe I had it!"

"It was at that time," Charles continued implacably, "that you told me where the spring-lancet was! I went and got it for you, asking not one single question. I've also offered you financial assistance. In return, you try to get me in bad with the police to direct suspicion from yourself!"

"What do you mean?"

"To distract the authorities' attention from the fact that you sent me to get this deadly weapon from Darrow's, from its hiding place which was known to you, you suggest that I've been trying to steal something that is no property of yours. If Miss Fuller sprang it with her foot, it must have been set. To divert suspicion? It was sprung when I found it, for I reset and sprang it to prove that."

The 10:15 click was explained! But I scarcely noticed the fact.

"Charles?" choked Julia, "are you accusing me of murdering our grandfather? . . . . Oh . . . . oh!"

For he was shrugging his shoulders mockingly. Mr. Almy intervened:

"Be careful what you say, both of you!"

"I have nothing to say," cried Julia passionately, "except that it is true my cousin went to get that spring-lancet, just as he says, and that he asked no questions. Neither did I ask him any questions after I had picked it up from beside my grandfather, in the law-book alcove last Monday morning!"

"And you leaped to the conclusion that I'd attacked him with it. Wonderful idea!" scoffed Charles, roughly. "What possible motive could I have had for wishing him out of the way?"

"To get that book with the bookplate before he did," answered Julia, steadily; "to get money—quickly. You always need it, Charles; he wouldn't give you all you wanted. Your desire for money is what's sending you to Buenos Aires. . . . And listen! I know I put those Liberty bonds into grandfather's desk, yonder; he asked me to do so. On Tuesday, when I came back from the hospital, they were gone. You are the only person who has a duplicate key to that desk; I suspected that you must have come back to the house unseen—"

("He came back," I murmured to Mr. Almy, "but not unseen. Tell you later!")

"—and taken them. And sure enough, they were sold for you. And I said nothing. But that's aside from the present point. Why did you go to Darrow's on Monday, if not after that book?"

Charles MacIvor flushed with rage, but seeing that he was still in a stronger position than Julia, he glared at her with defiance. She paid no attention to his anger. In fact, she spoke, seeing she must speak, as gently as she did firmly.

"Charles," she said, "it was for you that I hid that spring-lancet."

"For me!"

"Yes. I kicked it under that desk as I ran up the aisle. For you I have kept silence, until you betrayed me, as you think—as I fear you hope. Now I see your absence from Darrow's after ten o'clock has made all my effort useless, foolish. I am in a defenseless position. All I can say of my own movements there that morning is that I spent the whole time searching for Clarihew's 'Notes.' What happened from twenty minutes of eleven until a quarter past, in reference to grandfather, I have no idea. But I have told the truth; my innocence will be proved."

CHAPTER XII

Revelations

"You'll need more than faith for that!" sneered Charles.

I had had enough of him.

"All right," said I, "we'll have some works too. One minute, please!"

My three companions, even Mr. Almy, stared at me open-mouthed, but I did not care, for I was going to make the bluff of my life, which was based, however, on some very careful thinking I had been doing during the last half-hour. There was a bowl of flowers on the table. I snatched them out of the bowl, picked up the bookplate, and laid it carefully on the surface of the water. Holding it there with one hand, with the other I extracted from my hair the sole wire hairpin I always wear out of deference to two helpless male relatives who beg at the most extraordinary times for "a tin one" to clean a pipe with. Next moment I plucked the bookplate forth from the bowl, laid hold of its edge firmly with my left thumb and forefinger, rasped the edge with the hairpin, and then slid the wire loop into a tiny crevice which had appeared on the edge. The damp paper parted farther as the hairpin slipped along. I returned it to its place, grasped the edges of the groove I had made, and pulled gently.

Slowly the bookplate peeled apart, amid a silence unbroken even by breathing. The picture remained in my left hand. In my right was a document. It was printed, with some blanks filled in by hand. I glanced at it, handed it to Julia, and regarded Mr. MacIvor with my sweetest smile.

"I'd never have thought of doing that if you hadn't suggested it wasn't all there," I observed affably.

But Julia interrupted, with a cry that ended all small talk:

"I was right! I knew it, I knew it!"

We all rushed to surround her.

In her shaking hand, slightly blurred by the water, yet still quite legible, its edges trimmed to fit the size of the bookplate which had been so tightly and so indiscernibly affixed to it, was a birth certificate. And on it was set forth that on May 2, 1905, in New York, Julia Grosvenor had been born, the daughter of Miles Harrington (deceased) of Eliot's Crossing, Virginia, and his wife, Mary Grosvenor.

"Well!" said Mr. Almy.

He said it after a long time, during which nobody had spoken. He spoke in a tone of congratulation and relief, in which, however, there was a faint undercurrent of apprehension. I don't know if anyone else noticed that, for certainly Julia was too excited, and as for Charles MacIvor, he passed out of my mind entirely for the moment.

"Of course," resumed Mr. Almy "that thing had to be somewhere; but I'll tell you frankly now, I had given up hope of finding it, for every clew was exhausted." Julia was not listening to him, however; her eyes were still devouring the certificate. He took her gently by the arm, and made her sit down. "Listen, please!" he said to her. "I have something else to tell you, some of it as good news as you have just heard. But first I must ask you to forgive me for the suffering you have undergone since your cousin came in a few minutes ago. I had to let him talk; and you'll talk some more, MacIvor, and to better purpose, in a moment!"

"What is the good news, Mr. Almy?" interrupted Julia, feebly.

He seemed to choose his words cautiously.

"When I went to the telephone," he answered, "I learned something I had not expected to hear so soon. I will just tell you now in a word that the person suspected of attacking your grandfather has been arrested. The evidence on which he is detained clears you entirely of suspicion. Details will be available later; just remember, now, you are cleared. And now," he added abruptly, "what you want to know, and are entitled to know, is the story of that bookplate. Out with it, MacIvor!"

For the first time since she had seen the certificate, Julia looked at her cousin. He was vindictive and sulky in his defeat; but Julia was such an appealing figure in her solitude and suffering that he actually spoke with a trace of shame, forced to obey his orders:

"She Went Out on the Balcony. Full of Curiosity, I Followed Her."

"It was your mother who drew that bookplate, Julia."

"My mother!"

"She was a gifted artist—"

"She must have been—oh, far beyond what I am! Why have I never known this? Why haven't I seen any of her other work, all my life?"

"Grandfather destroyed it."

"How did he dare?" flamed the girl. Then she quieted down. "Well, what does it matter after all? She left this bookplate; it was by that that she saved my birth certificate for me! Why are you startled, Charles? Of course I know that! How? Simply because she was my mother, and no one else would have done it for me. You may tell me how she did it!"

Charles had indeed been startled by the unerring divination, and began nervously:

"I was here visiting grandfather a couple of months after you were born, Julia. I was nearly nine years old—old enough to notice lots of things. I sensed there was some kind of trouble about Aunt Mary, your mother. She was very sick, for one thing; she hardly ever went out. Then grandfather seldom spoke to her. Sometimes, when she felt well enough, she would draw a little. I liked to watch her. One of a number of sketches I saw her working on was that bookplate. Of course I didn't know then what it was.

"One day she asked me to mail a letter for her. It was addressed to a Mr. Edward Case, whom I remembered having seen at the house more than once, during a previous visit I made. I had liked him; he was friendly, and had shown me some little attentions such as a small boy enjoys. In fact, he had made some impression on me, and as you know now I recognized him last Thursday night. It certainly was a shock, especially as he seemed to have changed scarcely at all. And the most amazing thing was that, in a minute, he appeared to recognize me—"

Charles had not known then, of course, what Mr. Case had told Julia an hour or so ago—that he had seen him off and on, in the neighborhood, undoubtedly, during the course of the years which had passed since his boyhood. Nor did he realize, probably, that his boldly formed features, his dark complexion, were of the type which changes least during growth. But he did suggest the immediate cause of the recognition, as he went on:

"I suppose the presence of the book, in the desk which I was apparently engaged in searching, stimulated Mr. Case's recollections violently. Well, to continue: The night after I had mailed my aunt's letter, I woke up suddenly. I was sleeping in that little room right alongside here; that's now the reception room; the noise that woke me came from this room. I peeped in, and saw my aunt opening that French window, which had creaked. She went out on the balcony. Full of curiosity, I followed her.

"Leaning over the railing, she spoke to some one down in the street: 'You'll give it to Royall?' I recognized Mr. Case's voice in answer: 'I promise.' I saw her drop a small book over the rail. Then I had just time to get back into my room and shut the door before she came back into the house.

"Six weeks later, she died. After a few days, of course, I got used to her absence, and took interest mainly in what happened around me from day to day. I noticed especially that grandfather kept searching, apparently in vain, through her papers for something he wanted very much. Then one day he missed something of his own, an old medical book that had belonged to his father the doctor. He accused me of having taken or mislaid it.

"I knew absolutely nothing about it, and disclaimed all knowledge of it, but he wouldn't believe me. He was very stern, and frightened me. Finally it came back to me that I had seen my aunt drop a book over the balcony that night. I had never told anyone of that experience; I liked knowing a secret that was none of my business, and, though I can't claim much credit, I was fond of Aunt Mary, and would never have done anything to hurt her. Still, now she was gone; and grandfather persistently accused me of having taken that book, so finally, in the hope of placating him, or at least distracting his attention from me, I told him what I had seen that night. Not one word did he say as I told my tale; but at least he never asked me for the book again.

"Well, years afterward grandfather told me what the story revealed to him. The paper he had been searching for was your birth certificate, and when he couldn't find it, he knew your mother had hidden it somewhere, for she would not have destroyed it. He realized, therefore, that she had hidden it most cunningly. She had chosen one of his most valued books for its hiding place. The bookplate would easily conceal the certificate, the book gave a convenient means for handling it, and if she had died before she could dispose of the book, the certificate would probably never have been disturbed.

Two Causes Found to Predispose to Death

For some time conclusions have been drawn regarding the times of day when most births and deaths occur. The question was studied in different countries and the results indicated that conditions differed with environment. No biological law was found to exist.

The inquiry has been carried on in various hospitals for a year past. Hourly statistics of births at La Pitie hospital, kept under Professor Jeannin, show that every month the number of births is greater between midnight and noon than between noon and the following midnight. As for deaths, they are more frequent during the period of sleep, from six o'clock at night to six o'clock in the morning, than during waking hours. In a single year 113 patients died in the night and only 88 in the daytime.

Besides, of these 113 deaths 59 occurred between six o'clock and midnight, in the early part of the sleeping period. There is thus a cosmic influence of night on births and deaths and perhaps sleep also does its part. These two causes, by increasing the excitability of the pneumogastric nerve, work together to predispose to death.—La Science Moderne, Paris.

Expressing Contempt

The tongue has a single gesture, and everybody knows what it means. It is thrust out to express contempt. The little girl who "sticks out her tongue" does not realize that her action, so unladylike, harks back to the prehistoric. It is undoubtedly a most ancient mode of conveying the idea of intensified disrespect. Everywhere in the world, among savage and civilized peoples, the lingual gesture has the same recognized significance.

Charm and Ability Handicap to Asquith

Lord Castelrose, writing on the death of Lord Asquith, dealt with the erudition of the Asquith family and said: "I could give you many examples of this. Years before the newspapers started their general knowledge questions Mr. Anthony Asquith invented a game of plying his father with strange and outlandish queries, and yet so great was Lord Oxford's erudition that I can hardly remember him failing over a fair question. I once heard Mr. Anthony Asquith persuade his father to recite backwards the Derby winners for the last 32 years, which he did accurately; to describe the duties of an official of the college of heralds; and also to give a brief description of a minor character in Max Beerbohm's "Zuleika Dobson." Elsewhere Lord Castlerose wrote: "It is true that Asquith was making a name for himself as a scholar in his youth but unfortunately he was earning no money. One day Lord Portsmouth wrote the famous master, Reverend Doctor Jowett, and said: 'Have you got a suitable undergraduate to read with my son, Lord Lymington, during the long vacation?'" Doctor Jowett replied that he had exactly the article required, in the shape of Mr. Asquith. As a tutor Mr. Asquith was a great success, but there was a drawback in having this handsome, penniless, clever young man in a household, for every single young lady in the countryside fell head-over-heels in love with him to the consternation of the matchmaking mothers. At last Doctor Jowett was communicated with again, and asked if he could not substitute a less clever, less attractive and less amusing tutor.—Pierre Van Passen, in the Atlanta Constitution.

The Honor Roll

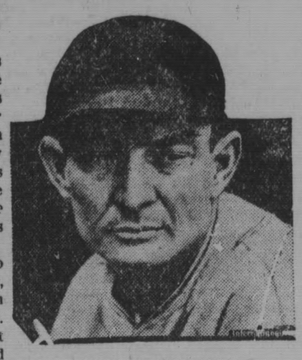
Gushing Lady—Oh, Mr. Jones, we are collecting funds to help the starving heathen. May I put your name on the succor list?—Christian Register.

McKechnie Looks Like Winner

WILLIAM M'KECHNIE, boss of the St. Louis Cardinals, is a living proof of the old adage that he who laughs last gathers no moss. For Bill, forced by Barney Dreyfuss two years ago to walk the plank, has slipped in under the Black Flag boat and stuck a marlin spike through below the water line, says a writer in the New Orleans Picayune.

Right now Dreyfuss faces the prospect of watching his scuttled ship flounder miles from the beach while McKechnie leads his Cardinals up the sands on a flight to the treasure cove.

McKechnie, charged with needing help to manage the Pirates to a pennant, is doing a pretty good job of directing the St. Louis team without any help outside of the co-operation he gets unsolicited from the boys on the team.



Manager McKechnie.

While Rabbit Maranville's comeback is playing a valuable part in the drive of the St. Louis club, and the work of old Grover Alexander, Frankie Frisch, Jim Bottomley and others must draw them a share of the credit, it is generally agreed that the astute leadership of McKechnie is the binding post on the St. Louis wagon.

McKechnie led the Pirates to a pennant in 1925. The next year, despite Bill's success, dissension arose in the ranks of the team. Dreyfuss, possibly in an earnest effort to correct matters, placed Fred Clarke, once idol of the Pirate fans as a player, on the bench with McKechnie, to represent the business office as assistant to the president or something like that.

One result of this action was a "round robin" suggestion from the players that Clarke be chased from the bench, Capt. Max Carey, Pitcher Clyde Barnhart and Outfielder Carson Bigbee were suspended and later disposed of as a result of this activity. Then came McKechnie's removal.

Last year McKechnie was signed as coach by the St. Louis Cardinals, to help Manager Bob O'Farrell, who was then serving his novitiate as a pilot. The Cardinals failed to retain the championship to which Rogers Hornsby had led them the year before.

O'Farrell, though a brilliant catcher, fell short of expectations as a manager. The added labors also detracted from his all-around work behind the plate. McKechnie gave O'Farrell and the Card owners the best he had, however, and his selection as manager to succeed O'Farrell was a popular move.

After getting away to a poor start, due to injuries to several of the regulars and the failure of the pitching staff to click as it did in 1927, the Cardinals wallowed about uncertainly for a few weeks. Then they found themselves.

And Bill McKechnie is letting the day's club standings do his laughing—with possible hope that Barney Dreyfuss and his office strategy board are still reading them and weeping, in a copious manner.

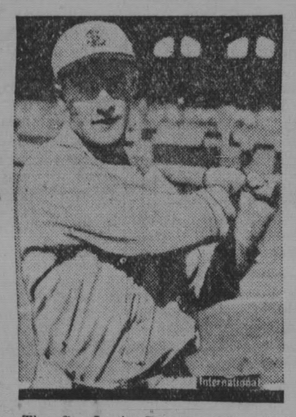
Schalk Favors Benefit Society for Old-Timers

If Ray Schalk, of the Chicago White Sox, has a pet peeve it is the tough breaks he says down and out ball players get.

"It's a downright shame," said the fiery little ex-manager, "the way many men, who have given the best years of their lives to baseball, are forced virtually to beg for a living in their old age. The average fan does not realize that where there is one highly paid player there are scores who receive ordinary pay."

Ray declares the present benefit organization is not functioning the way it should. He says one modeled after the actors' association is needed.

Browns Find Star



The St. Louis Browns, who, incidentally, have shown what can be done by turning a bad team inside out between seasons, have a lad named Kress. Baseball men agree he is about as fine a shorstopping prospect as seen in some days, but can anybody picture him continuing to bat .400 as at present? They have not discovered his weakness. Of course, if he slides down even as much as 100 points he still will be worth having around.

The latter watched Pipgras pitch a score or more of the balls, then declared Pipgras had it and, moreover, with control."

BROUTHERS WAS MIGHTY HITTER

Helped Detroit Win Its First World Title.

They had 'em in the early period of the game—hard hitting, long distance and powerful batsmen—for the home-run hitter is not entirely a product of today. Dan Brouthers, Sam Thompson, Roger Connor, Ed Delahanty, Buck Freeman, Gavvey Cravath were mighty batsmen who could hit the unleavened ball as hard as any batsman since their generation.

Brouthers was one of the three hardest hitting first sackers the game ever had. It was Big Dan, Dave Orr and Pop Anson, a trio of noble batsmen who hit .345 or better during their entire careers. Brouthers finished his career of 17 years in the big stuff with a lifetime batting average of .348. He holds a record of hitting three homers in a single game.

With the Troy club in 1879, Brouthers, who was over six feet in height and weighed 230, in running to second fell on McGlynn, the guardian of the sack. The impact and fall that followed the collision was so terrific that McGlynn died within a week from the injuries. Big Dan quit the game for two years. In 1881 the Buffalo National induced him to sign a contract. During the five years with the club Brouthers won nation-wide fame because of his terrific hitting. It was Brouthers, Rowe, White and Richardson who formed the Big Four that became so famous the country over.

It was the "Big Four," with the addition of Sam Thompson, that gave the Detrot club its first pennant and a world's championship in 1887. Brouthers was a fast man on the base lines. In eight of his playing years he scored 100 or more runs each year. His average runs for the 17 years stood .091 a game. In 15 of the 17 years he batted .300 or better.

In 1904, at the age of forty-four Dan was playing first for the Port Huron keepsie club of the Hudson River league. In a game against the Poughkeepsie club he made two home runs, four singles in six times up. It was estimated that one of the homers traveled 500 feet by actual measurement. Today the big slugger is coaching boys who keeps the Polo grounds in fine condition for the youngsters.

Temple U. Stadium to Be Completed Soon

The Temple university stadium going up in Germantown, suburb of Philadelphia, will be completed September 1. For the opening football game with St. Thomas college on September 29, 35,000 seats will be available. The stadium will be dedicated October 13 when Temple lines up against Western Maryland. The stadium will be bowl shaped and ultimately will accommodate 75,000 to 80,000 fans. This will give the Quaker City three big stadiums. Penn can seat over 80,000, while the municipal stadium built during the sesquicentennial also accommodates about 80,000.

"Knockout King" Chaney Credited With 101 Wins

Not so many years ago there flourished a fighter who probably had more knockouts to his credit than any other boxer in the book today. He is George Chaney of Baltimore, dubbed the "knockout king." He wore that on his jersey, and when he retired from career he had 101 knockouts to his credit.

But his was a built-up reputation, to a certain extent, and his title of genuine class was proved when, at the height of his career, he battled Champion Johnny Kilbane, and himself took a knockout powder in the third round.

Golf has made as big a hit in Siam as the Siamese twins did in the U. S. The Scottish national game has a Siam hard, and everyone, from the king on down, does his daily 18. The king is the latest enthusiast. His desire to play, however, is greater than his ability, as he himself confesses. "I often feel tempted to throw my clubs away and give up the game," he said. "Then I decide to play one more stroke, hit a 'screamer,' and my interest is renewed."

THE GENEROUS OPPONENT

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

It was Abraham Lincoln who used to say that one never lost anything in conceding to an enemy or to an opponent everything that it was possible truthfully to grant. One only made his own case stronger, he held, when he admitted that the opposing side had merit, but showed that in spite of its claim to attention his own case was the stronger.

There were some hot political contests in our community last spring, and though I heard much discussion I cannot now recall anything complimentary that was said by any candidate relative to his opponent. From the standpoint of all the speakers I heard the opposing candidates were all little better than thieves and liars.

The case of Jeff Fowler of Throckmorton, Texas, however, as given in a recent issue of the New York Sunday Times is different. He has a lot of interesting things to say both of himself and of his opponents. The letter which he writes to his constituents is extremely generous to the other candidates and reveals the fact that Jeff knows his political onions. It follows:

"To the Voters of Throckmorton County:

"Having been strongly solicited, by my wife, I hereby announce my candidacy for the office of county attorney. I shall be opposed in this race by two of your best-known citizens, Hon. B. F. Reynolds and Mr. James F. Wright. Concerning them, I shall have nothing to say except that they are upright and honorable men deserving of your confidence and support.

"Mr. Reynolds came to Throckmorton county before most of us were born, when it represented the last outpost of civilization and lay far out on the edge of the wild frontier. But for such men as he, who came here when every step was attended by dangers and existence meant a battle and a march, there would be no Throckmorton county and no county attorney's office to fill. For his labor and sacrifice, we are all grateful. A life of noble deeds and great achievements recommends him to the voters. He is my friend and I love him. I have served for the past year, and am at present his assistant.

"Mr Wright is a native son and was born in the county he seeks to serve. He is capable and qualified to fill the office and is deserving of the trust he asks you to bestow. He, also, is my friend, and should you elect him as your servant, I am sure your confidence would not be misplaced.

"As for myself, I am an 'Arkansas Hill-Billy,' born and raised in the Ozark mountains; outran the dogs on Sunday morning to keep from having my face washed—did my sparking barefooted—never saw a train until I was fifteen and was almost grown before I learned that Republicans walked on hind feet like people.

"Have farmed with a bull-tongue plow—taught school—practiced law—and am a first-class mechanic, having worked a right smart around a molasses mill. Came to Texas two years ago and married the finest little girl in Throckmorton county. I want the office because I think I can make a living out of it, and will promise, if elected, to try and make thieves and bootleggers think hell ain't forty feet from the courthouse.

"So I expect to spend the time between now and the election kissing babies, complimenting the ladies' cooking and bragging on the Old Man's crop.

"Your vote and influence will be appreciated.

"JEFF FOWLER."

If Jeff wasn't elected diplomacy counts for nothing in Arkansas.

- Mercy for Forger -

Albany, N. Y.—Sent to Sing Sing two years ago, George Starin Cowles, gray-haired Yonkers architect, who forgot to clip the tail of a comma from the letterhead on which he forged a will naming himself the largest beneficiary of the estate of his uncle, is soon to receive a conditional pardon.

Supreme Court Justice Tompkins of Nyack, who sentenced Cowles to serve eight to sixteen years, recommended that the sentence be commuted. District Attorney Arthur Rowland of Westchester and Special District Attorney Sydney A. Syme of Mount Vernon, who prosecuted Cowles, have concurred in the recommendation.

"I feel that the ends of justice have been served in the Cowles case," Justice Tompkins explained.

Plotted for Years.

For 25 years, according to the plea for clemency made by Cowles' lawyer when his client was sentenced, the Yonkers architect plotted to steal the fortune of his uncle, Edwin A. Oliver, part owner of the Yonkers Statesman, and writer of a humorous column. The birth of the idea, the attorney said, came when Cowles discovered that his grandfather, John W. Oliver, instead of willing him $250,000, named Edwin A. Oliver, his son, as chief beneficiary.

At that time Cowles was engaged to marry Nellie Drummond, daughter of a Yonkers business man. The wedding was postponed while Cowles brooded over devices to gain the money he felt was rightfully his. Then the younger Oliver died and Cowles discovered that only a small part of the fortune had been left to him.

Studied Long at Library.

He studied days and nights at the New York public library and finally submitted a will which, he said, was Oliver's last testament. The genuine will also was filed.

In preparing the fraudulent will, Cowles cut off the name of the printer of the legal sheet, but inadvertently left the tail of a comma. Further investigation showed that the blank on which the fake will was drawn had been printed in October, 1924, while the will was dated a month earlier.

Cowles' accomplice, Miss Drummond, at whose home he had been living for years, and William Weeks, Olivers' chauffeur, confessed they had witnessed the fraudulent will and Cowles pleaded guilty of forgery. Weeks and Miss Drummond were freed.

After he had been in prison several months, the real Oliver will was probated and revealed bequests of only $46,000, instead of the $250,000 Cowles had expected would be his. To Cowles was left $3,867, but he never received a cent because of his legal expenses in contesting the real will.

Town Uses Soda Water for Street Cleaning

Altheide, Germany.—The city council voted to use soda water exclusively for street cleaning purposes, so that henceforth, under the new measure, soda fountains will be hauled through the streets and plazas with sprinkler attachments.

Altheide's mineral springs spout 2,000,000 quarts of the stuff every day and most of it is wasted. Ordinary water is expensive and it was decided that soda could do the work more efficiently and cheaply.

Close to the Arctic

OF FILET LACE

Dorothy Mackaill, in "Lady Be Good," illustrates the new mode in fashions for summer in a filet lace frock combined with chiffon in a delicate shade of shell pink. The skirt of regular length consists of two ruffles of lace attached to a bodice of the pink chiffon. The old fashioned girdle with a deep back is made interesting with bows and a ribbon seamer of chiffon at the shoulder. A large, transparent hat of horsehair and chiffon and a ruffled parasol complete a picture of femininity that carries back memories of the fluffy ruffle girl of bygone days.

Seek Phantom Ships

Nome, Alaska.—While American newspaper readers have their attention centered on the feats and perils of Arctic aerial exploration, Eskimos of the north Alaskan coast search the horizon for another reason.

They seek every returning spring for one or more of the phantom fleet, the frozen, lost ships, drifting with the sinister ice pack from which, sooner or later, some of them must emerge as the great floes break with the seasons.

Whether the fleet is legendary or really exists is one of the problems haunting Arctic navigators for years. Vessels have disappeared into the unexplored polar basin ever since the beginning of the Arctic navigation. In one great swoop, the death fanged ice pack in 1876 carried off 30 whaling boats from the waters of the American continent. All but 70 of the men escaped to Point Barrow but the ships were frozen hard and high into the pack. The ice fields covering a million square miles rotates around the central pole slowly in the same direction of the earth's movement and in cycles brings objects gradually back to certain spots.

Eskimos who have escaped from the ice pack after being carried far north into the unexplored wastes have returned with tales of silent ships hard and fast in the white bergs. Some tells of seeing a ship sitting alone in a vast solitude. Others report several boats close together but frozen solid miles and miles in the Arctic interior.

In the hope that some day the ice pack will break up and release one or more of the phantoms Eskimos each spring eagerly scan the returning open waters. Should one of the old boats escape in good condition and be cast on shore near the native villages they might revel in the wealth of wood, steel and iron instruments and various stores. Once solidly frozen in the Arctic, food, clothing, rope, tools, and weapons are preserved for all time and return to usefulness when thawed.

The first breakup of the polar seas also brings Eskimos a great offering of driftwood in which are found a varied and more or less useful assortment of articles.

Magnet Saves Life

Guthrie, Okla.—A magnet saved the life of Fred Perdue, a young farmer, in an operation here. Perdue complained of severe pains in his back. Big Vessel for White Star Line

London.—The biggest ship in the world was begun in Belfast recently when the keel was laid for a giant White Star liner to cost $30,000,000. She will be more than 1,000 feet long, with a beam of 100 feet and tonnage of about 60,000.

The ship will not be ready for sailing until 1932, and experts have yet to decide what type of machinery will be installed in her.

When the new ship is added to the White Star fleet she will be called the Oceanic. The six largest steamships in service at the present time, all in the Atlantic trade, are:

The Leviathan of the United States lines, 59,957 gross tonnage, 907 feet long and 100 feet 8 inches beam.

The Majestic of the White Star line, claimed by some to be the largest liner afloat, on the basis of the builder and designer's prewar measurements, which are 56,551 gross tons, 915 feet and 5 inches long and 100 feet and 1 inch beam.

The Cunarder Berengaria, 52,226 gross tonnage, 833 feet 5 inches long, 98 feet 5 inches beam.

The White Star Olympic, 46,439 gross tonnage, 883 feet 5 inches long, 92 feet 5 inches beam.

The Cunarder Aquitania, 45,647 gross tonnage, 868 feet 7 inches long and 97 feet beam.

The new French liner, Ile de France, 43,500 gross tonnage, 757 feet 8 inches long and 91 feet 8 inches beam.

The golden rule is frequently used in drawing a line of conduct for others.

Alas for idols! Very few of the world's big jobs are held by men who were valedictorians.—Buffalo News.

Another Metal Is Born of Factory Waste Heaps

London.—Out of waste heaps where worthless ore had been previously dumped a new metal, called beryllium, has been extracted. This new metal is about a third lighter than aluminum, much harder, and has about four times its elasticity. Salt water does not corrode it, nor will liquids or fumes. Its light gray color takes a polish like steel.

Small Bears Clearly Not Wanted at Feast

Yellowstone park ravens and magpies evidently never heard of Elisha; at any rate they certainly have no fear of bears.

Ranger Thad Pound was making his rounds a short time ago, when he noticed a great commotion among a flock of ravens and magpies. Upon investigation he found that the center of the disturbance was a very much distressed she bear with a pair of cubs which were receiving the mauling of their lives from the birds' beaks. The cubs were rolled over on their backs, trying to defend themselves with their paws, while the mother was hard put to it to shield her lustily bawling offspring.

The occasion of the battle was the carcass of a winter-killed elk, on which the birds had evidently been feasting. Interrupted by the bears, they had resented the intrusion and turned to do battle with the uninvited guests.—Kansas City Star's Science Service.

His Qualification for Service in the Tanks

After a six weeks' intensive campaign, Richard Barthelmess and his fellow-players in "The Patent Leather Kid" company were honorably discharged from the United States army at Camp Lewis, Washington.

While at Camp Lewis some of the finest battle scenes were screened. More than 3,000 United States regulars and 600 civilians participated in the war spectacle, which is featured by the 50 huge United States tanks.

During the shooting an extra came up to Richard and announced he'd like to enlist in the tanks.

"Why so keen about the tanks?" asked Dick.

"Oh," replied the applicant modestly, "I'm a pretty good swimmer."—Film Fun.

Radio From Your Body

Almost every one has had the strange experience of "feeling the presence" of some person in a room, when that person was out of sight and hearing. According to Popular Science Monthly, two Munich professors have made discoveries which may help explain the mystery. The skin, they have found, holds an electrical charge, as if connected with a hidden battery. By delicate radio instruments they claim to have discovered that our bodies send forth electrical emanations which can be detected six feet away.

Cecile's Sharp Wit

Here's the latest on Cecile Evans, Hollywood's sharpest wit. The story, told by James R. Quirk in Photoplay Magazine, goes that she drove her roadster into the temporary garage of a four-thousand-dollar-a-week-man on the First National lot. Along came the Rolls-Royce.

"What do you mean by stalling your contraption in my garage?" yelled the justly irate F. T. A. W. M.

"I'm sorry," apologized Cecile. "I saw one of your pictures last night and I thought you were through here."

Found Her Pet Was Wild

A big black bear, roaming down from the mountains in search of plunder, was fed by a Capilano (British Columbia) woman, who thought he was tame. Milk and honey she gave the black fellow who appeared at her doorstep, thinking him the pet of Charles Anderson, a forest ranger. For several days the bear appeared and was fed. At last the kind woman asked Mr. Anderson why he didn't feed his bear and the mistake was discovered.

No Wood in This House

A house without a single sliver of wood in its construction is being built in Gary, Ind., for the president of a local steel company. The framework is made of angle-irons with a complete system of diagonal bracing. Both bolting and electric welding is used to fasten the steel together. Concrete is used in the foundation and for the floors, while stairs, sills and interior trim are all steel.

Work for Armenian Women

Armenian women who flee to Marseilles with their husbands during the Greco-Turkish war of 1922-23, have founded a rug-weaving industry. The men were able to find work in mines, factories and on farms, but the women were less fortunate. Local capital was interested in rug weaving and the women workers now produce more than 6,000 square meters of oriental rugs yearly in eight plants.

Farmers to Use Planes

Many owners of large farms in South Africa are considering the use of airplanes for trips to the city. Farms in that country are enormous in size, as a rule, and planes could also be employed in making trips of inspection. Yards are so large that there is ample space for landing at the owner's front door.

Not Today

Little Betsy was gazing out of the window one afternoon during a recent severe storm. She saw the sun become overshadowed by heavy clouds and the day grow almost dark.

Novel Recipe for "Coffee Frappe"

An efficient hostess always likes to distinguish her luncheons and dinners with a novelty. One of the things that always contributes to a memorable luncheon is a frozen dessert. As housewives learn the ease with which that type of dessert is prepared, it becomes a regular part of their menus.

A delicious recipe for coffee frappe is given by the home economics department of the California Association of Ice Industries. The ingredients: one and three-fourths cupfuls strong, hot coffee; one-half cupful sugar; one-half teaspoon vanilla, and one egg white.

Dissolve the sugar in the hot coffee, but do not let it come to the boiling point. Cool, add the vanilla and freeze. The freezing is accomplished by placing the mixture in a mould and burying in a mixture of three parts ice to one part ice cream salt, for several hours. Empty baking powder cans make excellent moulds.

When the freezing process is about half completed, stir in the stiffly beaten egg white and finish freezing. This is particularly refreshing in hot weather and will take the place of a dessert and coffee as well.

According to the home economist of the California Association of Ice Industries, coffee should never be allowed to boil as boiling destroys the flavor and develops a bitterness which is particularly noticeable when it is iced or frozen.

Mrs. Henry Witte and son, Erwin, and daughter, Lorraine, returned this week from Lake Tahoe where they have a summer cabin. They have been at the lake for a month.

Diplomatic Delay Is Dangerous

Every sensible son of humanity sees some solution of world problems in Secretary Kellogg's proposal to outlaw war, and rejoices to realize that 14 nations already have signed their approval and adhesion.

But, by a curious sample of political unwisdom, one most populous and powerful of peoples has not even, so far as is known, been invited to become a party to that praiseworty peace treaty.

Of course, I refer to Russia, at present a pariah among nations, able to mobilize millions of soldiers, though recently her government proposed world disarmament; a proposal then sneered at as insincere because their experiment in democracy does not suit our somewhat less democratic ideals.

Now, over a century ago one James Monroe gave advice for such cases. It ran thus, the U. S. A. was not to interfere in the internal concerns of any European power; "to consider the government DE FACTO as the legitimate government for us; to cultivate friendly relations with it; and to preserve those relations by a just, firm, and manly policy."

For eleven years the Russian people have given enthusiastic approval and support to their existing DE FACTO government; surely, it is high time that we cultivated friendly relations with the 160,000,000 citizens of that vast area. Russia at least have the courtesy and common sense to invite them in the Kellogg treaty to war.

Why try to force our views to what constitutes proper government on our neighbors, injure our trade and endanger world's peace?
